ABOUT THE ASSOCIATION

The Banking Law Association was begun in 1983 when an interested group saw the need for an organisation that would provide for the dissemination of information on banking law usages and practices. This is achieved through the running of programmes emphasising the practical application of these laws and usages.

The Association is incorporated under the Corporations Law and is administered by a Board from various states. The Board is elected annually following the Annual General Meeting of the Association. A number of volunteer Committees are formed after the AGM. Nominations are called to serve on the Conference Planning & Younger Member Committees as well as an opportunity to serve on the Scholarship and Research Prize Panels.

The membership of the Association is approximately 750 and includes law firms, banks and financial institutions. Annual Conferences have been held since 1984, with local and overseas speakers from the banking, legal and commercial fields. Workshops on appropriate topics have been held in the various States from time to time.

The full Constitution can be viewed via the Association website at: www.bfsla.org

AIMS OF THE ASSOCIATION

The Association's concern with Banking law and practice covers both Australian and overseas law, custom, practice, and legislation (both existing and proposed). It is also interested in comparative and international law affecting the banking industry.

The Association exists to foster and encourage the gaining of knowledge of that law and practice, and considering understanding and disseminating that knowledge among members of the legal profession, the banking industry and the commercial community at large.

The Association achieves its aims principally by means of seminars, conventions, discussions, lectures and the publication of papers and books on relevant subjects. The Association endeavors to be responsive to the needs of its members in achieving its aims.
